12.0 The Legacy of the Plan of Chicago

Daniel Burnham's 1909 Plan of Chicago was phenomenally important to today's city and the region. The lakefront parks, the forest preserve system, Wacker Drive, the Magnificent Mile—all owe their origins to this famous (but often misunderstood) document. It's the year of Burnham, and centennial celebrations this summer will spotlight the Plan's history and energize today's regional planning efforts. It's equally important to recognize the civic leaders and technicians—beyond Burnham—who brought the Plan to life in the early 20th century and shaped the city we know. Dennis McClendon, a Chicago geographer and historian, will touch on the highlights of his lively lecture that includes pictures of the Chicago that faced the planners a century ago, the grand visions they had for the city, and what actually resulted from the Plan of Chicago. He wrote the booklet being distributed by the Burnham Plan 100 organization that is available online at www.planofchicago.org.
