

Patch's House & Home, Local Connections

Report: Palatine Needs More Senior Housing in Future

The Chicago Metropolitan Agency for Planning conducted a housing study of five towns in the northwest suburbs and recently released its report.

7:43 am

Tweet Email Print Comment

The village of Palatine is hoping to use data collected from a regional report to help plan for its future housing needs.

The Chicago Metropolitan Agency for Planning conducted a housing study and recently released its report, "Homes for a Changing Region," which provided suggestions for "long-term housing policy plans" for Palatine, Arlington Heights, Buffalo Grove, Mount Prospect and Rolling Meadows, according to the Chicago Tribune.

Kevin Anderson, Palatine's assistant director of planning and zoning, told the Chicago Tribune that one of the report's main suggestions — to add more senior housing — did not come as a surprise but the report did address ways for the village to meet those needs.

The housing report also called for more multi-family housing, affordable housing and, in villages such as Arlington Heights, "additional luxury housing for upper-income earners," according to the Chicago Tribune.